What to include in a personal history statement

CC0/Free-Photos/Pixabay You probably know that George Washington was the first President of the United States and that the U.S. entered World War II after the attack on Pearl Harbor. Those key facts are only the tip of the iceberg when it comes to America history. Brush up on your history with these 10 facts about the U.S. that you probably didn’t know. Sitting Presidents Have Gone into Battle with TroopsThe president has the title commander-in-chief of the military, but few of them have actually joined troops on the battlefield. George Washington led the militia to Bedford in 179Eighteen years later, James Madison borrowed dueling pistols from his secretary and headed to the streets of Washington to confront the British during the War of 181Lincoln later was present at the Civil War Battle of Fort Stevens.George Washington Is the Highest Ranking Member of the MilitaryWhen George Washington retired from public service after leading the Revolutionary Army and serving as the country’s first president, he was a lieutenant general. In 1976, he received a new title: General of the Armies of the United States, in recognition of his contributions to the American military system. No one can have a higher title.A Slave Introduced the Concept of Inoculation to the CountryCotton Mather’s slave, Onesimus, talked of the African practice of scratching infected cells from a sick person into a healthy one. He got the chance to prove how this practice worked when smallpox broke out in Massachusetts. Although the colonists did not accept this practice, it did show up on the battlefield during the Revolutionary War.No One Knows What Started the Salem Witch TrialsSalem history may be forever tied to what eventually became known as the Salem Witch Trials. In Arthur Miller’s play based on the event, he suggests that the trials started after the reverend’s slave confessed to working for the devil as she endured torture. The truth is that no one knows for sure exactly why the people in Salem succumbed to their fear of evil in the village and started arresting and executing people without solid evidence. Some possible theories include ergot poisoning, Lyme disease and family rivalries.Slavery Took Place in the Northern StatesThe colonists practiced slavery in all of the original 13 colonies. By 1804, all of the northern states had signed documents officially ending the practice within their borders, but it took a few more years before everyone in those states enjoyed freedom. President Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation in 1863 to free the slaves in the southern states. The thirteenth amendment made this the official law of the land.CC0/orythys/Pixabay The Colonies Voted for Independence on July 2Although the U.S. celebrates its birthday on July 4, representatives from the colonies voted for independence two days earlier. The second president of the new country, John Adams, refused to attend Fourth of July celebrations because it wasn’t the right birthday.CC0/jill111/Pixabay Only One President Was Born on July 4This honor goes to Calvin Coolidge, who was born on July 4, 187He was president from 1923 until 192Two former presidents died on Independence Day. Thomas Jefferson and John Adams died within hours of each other on July 4, 1826.CC0/jill111/Pixabay No One Who Signed the Declaration of Independence Was Born in the United StatesSince the United States didn’t exist as a country when the Declaration of Independence was signed, there’s no way any of the signers could have been born in it. All of them were born in one of the colonies that eventually became the United States.There Was No Official U.S. Currency Until After the Civil WarThe early United States government tried to create currency called the Continental dollar, but it had no true value. Before the Civil War, there were several different types of money produced by individual banks. Eventually, Congress authorized new national currency and a national banking system.CC0/geralt/Pixabay The Elephant and Donkey Symbols Were Originally a JokeArtist Thomas Nash created the elephant and donkey symbols that now represent the Republicans and Democrats. It all dates back to 1874 political cartoon published in Harper’s Weekly. This is the same man responsible for our modern image of Santa Claus.CC0/chayka1270/Pixabay MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET Something went wrong. Wait a moment and try again. It is about who you are and why you are applying to study a particular course and not your job history. A personal history statement is not your CV. Personal Statement Format – How to write a Personal Statement? Your Personal Statement should be no more than one page in length and no more than 200 words. The personal statement format is no different to any other form of academic writing. You will need to write in your own voice and show your personality. You will want to show that you are self-motivated, self-aware and have a clear idea of your own goals. You can use your experience in your personal statement to show how you have developed and what you have learned from your career and how you have developed as a person. The personal statement format is no different to the format of your CV. You will need to write your name, your course details and the date in the top right hand corner and then list your skills, achievements, work experience, awards and other details on the left. You can also add a statement on why you are applying for the job and how this experience has helped you to get to where you are. You can add details about how you are looking for a job and what you want to achieve in your personal statement. The first step in writing a Personal Statement is to decide on your goals for the future. This is your personal statement. The key thing to remember is that you should show that you have goals in mind for your future and that you are prepared to achieve them. This can be achieved by writing about what you want to achieve in the future and how you are going to get there. You should show that you have a plan and are aware of what is required to reach your goals. For example, you might have achieved a promotion at work but you want to increase your skills and improve on your performance. In this section, you can show how this has helped you to achieve this aim. This can be achieved by showing how you have improved and developed in your role. The next step is to show your skills and achievements. This can be achieved by using the skills and achievements section to show how you have achieved these skills and what you can offer the employer. This is the section that shows what skills you can offer to the job. For example, if you have a degree in Accounting then this could show your skills and qualifications in the field of accounting. You could also show how this has helped to develop your career. You could also show that you have a good working relationship with your manager and how this has improved your career. What Is a Personal Statement? A Personal History Statement (PHS) is a brief written account of events that shaped your personality and how they influenced your decision to apply to a particular course. It is usually required by universities when you are applying for a course. It gives you an opportunity to show why you would make a good student and how you have developed in the same way as other applicants. The Personal Statement is a way for admissions officers to get a better understanding of you as a person, what you have achieved, and why they should accept you. It also gives you an opportunity to show how your skills and qualities will benefit the course you are applying for and why you are a suitable candidate. In the main part of the Personal Statement, you can include any experiences that are relevant to the course. For example, you can write about your summer holidays in your home country, a trip to an important cultural landmark, a community service you have been involved in, a community event that has had a major impact on you, etc. The Personal Statement is usually around 200 words long and should be submitted within the 250 word limit. You will be asked to include a personal statement within the university application, but it is important to make sure it is well-written and structured to show the admissions board why you would make a good student and why they should accept you as a student. It should be a coherent narrative that tells the reader about your experiences and how they have influenced you. The personal statement is not just a list of things that have happened to you, but it should show the impact they have had on your life. A personal history statement is an important part of the university application and you need to make sure you get it right. It can be tricky to write a Personal Statement, as it is not a list of things that have happened to you. Instead, it is a narrative that shows the impact that these things have had on your life. The Personal Statement is your opportunity to show the reasons why you want to study a particular course, and the reasons why you would make a good student. The personal statement format is not just about listing your achievements, but it is also about showing the impact they have had on you. The Personal Statement is not just about the things that have happened to you, but it is also about how you have changed and developed.
